The Service That Is Available

Much is heard about the claim that advertising places an additional cost upon the goods which are so persistently kept in the public eye. Advertising it must be agreed is not a free will offering but neither is it a price raiser. It is the means whereby a greater volume of business can be done and through that larger amount of trade it results in the handling of a larger amount of goods through the percentage of profit remains the same or is in many cases less. A bigger business with no increase in the price of each article operates to the advantage of the business man and it takes care of the cost of advertising.

DID NOT SEE GUNS ON THE LUSITANIA

Indictment Charging Gustav Stahl With Perjury Alleges He Swore Falsely

IN TOMBS IN DEFAULT OF $10,000 BAIL

Federal Grand Jury Returned Indictment at New York Yesterday—W. N. Olney, Division Superintendent of Department of Justice, Believes Stahl, Although a German Reservist, Was Actuated by a Desire to Raise Money Rather Than by Patriotic Zeal.

New York, June 18.—Gustav Stahl, who swore that he had seen four guns aboard the Lusitania just before she sailed, was indicted on a charge of perjury by the federal grand jury this afternoon. The indictment was handed to Judge Russell, sitting in the criminal court, by the federal grand jury. Stahl, on a preliminary complaint, has been in the Tombs in default of $10,000 bail.

The indictment explains that on June 10 there was pending before the grand jury a proceeding against Paul Koenig, also known as Stenier, and others, on a charge of having conspired to defraud the United States in violation of section 37 of the United States criminal code. Stahl was called as a witness.

What the Indictment Charges. Stahl testified, the indictment charges, that he had seen four guns on the Lusitania, which was sunk on April 30 he had gone aboard the Lusitania with one Leach, and that while on the vessel he had seen four guns on one of the upper decks, which were mounted on wooden blocks and covered with a tarpaulin.

The indictment further charges that at the time of so swearing Stahl did not believe it to be true that he had seen four guns on the Lusitania and had seen the four guns.

In conclusion, the indictment states that Gustav Stahl, by so swearing, that Stahl "did wilfully, knowingly and feloniously, and contrary to his oath, depose a state material matters which were not true and thereby did commit wilful and corrupt perjury against the peace of the United States in such case made and provided."

Committed to the Tombs. When he left the grand jury room after swearing that he had seen the guns, Stahl was arrested on a preliminary complaint made by Raymond H. Sarfaty, assistant United States district attorney, charging perjury. Pending examination on the complaint, he was committed to the Tombs in default of $10,000 bail. While he was locked up, the grand jury, in continuing the inquiry, was told that Koenig procured the evidence upon which they returned the perjury indictment against Stahl.

Object Was Not Patriotic. William M. O'Leary, division superintendent of the local office of the department of justice, says he does not think Stahl, although a German reservist, was actuated by patriotic zeal in swearing that the Lusitania was armed, but that his sole object in making the statement was to raise money "so that he could have a good time and live without working."
